

Adviser at a glance:

BXIAO-QING WANG, Ph. D.
Associate Professor of Sociology

After graduating from the University of Notre Dame with a Ph. D. degree in sociology in 2004, and two-year (2004-2006) postdoctoral teaching and research at California Institute of Technology, I have been conducting research on Chinese studies such as Christianity in China and Chinese immigration to Los Angeles. Along with my expertise in ethnography and primary data collection, and certification of providing advice on human subject research and training students to use the longitudinal and sectional databases, I am qualified to direct graduate students' quantitative and qualitative research. Being born and raised in China, having experienced diverse political and cultural movements in China, worked as a peasant and a worker, and taught in a middle school and Hebei University, I understand Chinese society and culture intuitively. I am willing to use my expertise and knowledge to advise graduate students on their master theses related to Chinese society and culture.
